

Indiana's no call law has worked well. There is no reason to allow excessive phone calls at what were before inappropriate times. It does not create more sales for the companies. It only unreasonably bothers individuals. Instead of preempting Indiana's law, use it as a base for how unsolicited calls should be allowed. I understand the need for uniformity, but there is no reason to be more lenient than Indiana's law. With free email, lower cost to use U.S. mail, excessive unsolicited catalogs, unsolicited flyers placed on car windshield and in mail boxes there simply is no reason to also provide unrestricted telephone solicitation for former contacts or new entities, because it is the most intrusive form of contact. Weigh individual rights in this instance over freedom for business.
